

Live Where Usain Bolt Stayed?

This could be a possibility, the London 2012 games are approaching and by 2013 any one of you could live in 'Athlete's Village'. I visited the Olympic park on the 'Athlete's Village tour' and I was left stunned by the amount of time, effort and investment going into the development.

I went on the visit with 'St. James' C of E Primary School'. There were 20 students on the trip, all from Year 4. I was surprised to learn how much they knew about the Olympics & Paralympics in Stratford; from the basics – the colours of the Olympic rings, right down to the details of the Stratford City & Athlete's Village developments.

Athlete's Village

By Adil Gulbahar

'Bovis Lend Lease' the company with all this weight on their shoulders has promised 2,800 new private and social homes (30% classed as 'affordable'), transport links, Chobham academy (a school which can accommodate 1800 pupils), green spaces and parks, sports facilities and a wide selection of local, independent and specialist shops. All this by 2012.

That's not all Stratford City is yet to come. This is a massive urban regeneration project worth £4 billion right on your doorstep. This however will take a longer period of time to build but it's worth the wait. This development consists of a shopping centre, 'Westfield' – reported to be larger than 'Bluewater', Stratford International station, 16,400 new homes and much more.

The future looks bright, the future is

